Analysis and design are Carrie Walden's strong suits. For renovation projects, she applies her insight into how load-bearing walls can be removed or structures modified to meet new functional uses. When investigating damaged structures, she is adept in pinpointing the cause of failure, distress or deterioration and in devising a pragmatic solution. On the job site, her keen perception helps her identify built conditions that vary from design intent and ways to resolve issues.

Organized, an excellent communicator and with strong attention to detail, Carrie is a superb project manager. She capably coordinates plans, schedules and budgets with architects, owners, subconsultants and other team members, simultaneously handling projects ranging from a multi-million-dollar 140-acre private estate to challenging concrete utility and pedestrian tunnel restoration projects to water and wastewater treatment structures to a non-profit organization's pre-school facility to repairing a high school weight room floor.

Carrie is a much disciplined individual demonstrated by her ability to effectively telecommute partly from her home without compromising client service and project delivery. As a new mother this flexibility provides her the opportunity to maintain her career without sacrificing time with her family. Carrie is active in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life and has volunteered at the Crisis Pregnancy Center.
